In Advent we began a whole new year in the life of the church. When I think of a New Year, I consider if I will be making any New Year's resolutions. If I do, then I try my best to stick with those resolutions. Now, people like to make different resolutions but inevitably they all seem to have one theme in common- personal improvement. In 2018 I am encouraging all of us to make one spiritual New Year's resolution and follow through on it!

Here are the skills essential for Christian living -- reading and interpreting the Bible so that it shapes our lives; nurturing our relationship with God through prayer; actively making connections between faith and daily life; being able to give voice to our faith so that it becomes real for us and those around us; gently inviting others to come to worship with us – if we are going to do these things, then we're going to need to help each other learn and practice those skills.

That is something that gives me great joy as a pastor: helping other people to understand their faith and to see how their faith impacts their daily lives. Sometimes I do this by having you fill out pieces of paper during worship. Sometimes I ask you questions in my sermon. Many times I ask us to go out into the world and do something concrete that puts our faith into action for the sake of others.

I do these things-- giving you a chance to participate, to practice, to learn new skills and gain some confidence and realize that we are all capable of making connections, of talking about our faith and of interpreting Scripture with confidence. I do these things so that we can work on developing the skills we need for living Christian lives. Does that mean taking risks? Yes. Does that mean trying to do things a little differently? Yes. Does that mean making a resolution or two that we will continue to grow as Christians in 2018? Yes- it means all of those things.

Given the emphasis on new beginnings in this New Year please consider: "What new thing do I want to learn in the coming year?" Please think about that. Ponder one new spiritual practice you would like to discover, one new facet of your faith you would like to grow in during the coming year. Then let me know what it is that you want to learn about. We can tackle these in Bible study, group discussions and, even practice them during worship. I look forward to hearing what your spiritual New Year's resolution is!

God Bless you all in this Year of Our Lord 2018,

Pastor Christopher Culuris
